Mr. G. A. Baldwin places us under obligations for a copy of the Hancock Whig, October 6, 1849; also a copy of the Hancock Journal, of June 13. 1851. These papers are quite inter esting reading. There have evidently many changes taken place in Findlay since those days, as we notice but few of the names of business men who are now here. Retired from business, gone West, and some "in the allent embrace of the grave." In the Whig we notice the following
